Colorado River Water Users Association

2007 Annual Report
and Membership Directory

Mission Statement

To provide a forum for exchanging ideas and perspectives regarding Colorado River use and management with the intent of developing and advocating common objectives, initiatives and solutions.

President's Message

If you research the world's wonders, you will find that water is an intricate part of this list. No wonder (no pun intended), we are curious and passionate about this ever reaching and encompassing element. Ancient and modern history is filled with events that mark water as a life altering force. As members of the Colorado River Water Users Association we are all a part of that legacy, our sense of belonging comes from shared values and experiences.

Membership in the Colorado River Water Users Association brings with it the benefit of gathering together in a casual and uncensored environment, to work through issues that are important to each member state and Tribes. Our conferences continue to be outstanding and informative, and during the December 2007 conference, our Association had the honor of hosting an historical event. Secretary of the Interior, Dirk Kempthorne, along with the seven Colorado River Basin States representatives, signed the Record of Decision for the Colorado River Interim Guidelines for Lower Basin Shortages and Coordinated Operations for Lake Powell and Lake Mead. Secretary Kempthorne remarked that "this is the most important agreement among the seven basin states since the original Colorado River Compact of 1922." Along with this memorable event we were also provided a program filled with a plethora of topics that encompassed the issues of global warming, rural water concerns and a view from the bridge to the uninvited—the Quagga mussel.

With great sincerity, I would like to express my gratitude to the Colorado River officers, trustees, committee chairs, Association members and stakeholders. This culmination of organizations and individuals understand the value of water, and recognize that continued cooperation among its users is paramount to protecting this precious resource. I would also like to thank Ms. Isabel Luna for her unfailing dedication to the association and upstanding professionalism that is evident in her work and character.

As I put pen to paper and surmise the events of the past twelve months, I am filled with a proud sense of achievement and realize how fortunate I am to be part of this organization. I have been afforded the opportunity to witness history in the making and observe our new members excitement and sparked curiosity when introduced to the ever-changing world of water. I celebrate our years of work together and stress, our goal should not be to simply maintain the status quo, but to uncover the potential of each member so we can prosper in this ever changing environment, thus transforming our association for the better. So, whether you're a seasoned member with vast information to share, or the forward thinking individual who may change the perception of what is improbable, your role as a member of the association is vital and we are better for knowing you.

Randy Kirkpatrick

The Colorado River

“We think of our land and water and human resources not as static and sterile possessions but as life giving assets to be directed by wise provisions for future days.”

Franklin D. Roosevelt

Reclamation

The Colorado River Interim Guidelines for Lower Basin Shortages and Coordinated Operations for Lakes Powell and Mead were completed and a Record of Decision signed by Interior Secretary Dirk Kempthorne at the CRWUA annual meeting.

In the Upper Colorado Region, the Animas-La Plata Project’s signature feature, Ridges Basin Dam, topped out on November 9. The A-LP will fulfill the requirements of the 1988 Colorado Ute Indian Water Rights Settlement Act and the Colorado Ute Settlement Act Amendments of 2000.

Under the Upper Colorado River Endangered Fish Recovery Program, construction began on a fish passage at the Price-Stubb Diversion Dam on the Colorado River in western Colorado. This project will restore 50 miles of historic river habitat blocked for nearly a century.

Development of the Glen Canyon Dam Long-Term Experimental Plan EIS also continued, with the release of a scoping report and the matrix of alternatives to be analyzed.

In the Lower Colorado Region, all requirements necessary to implement the Arizona Water Settlements Act were completed. This Act represents the largest Indian water rights settlement in United States history; it will benefit Arizona and New Mexico water users.

In November, Reclamation and its Lower Colorado River Multi-Species Conservation Program partners dedicated six new ponds constructed at the Imperial National Wildlife Refuge. The ponds provide habitat for endangered Colorado River fish. And more than 1,300 acres of land and 1,300 acre feet of water was secured through this program to create new wildlife habitat in southwest Arizona's Cibola Valley.

The Yuma Desalting Plant operated at 10 percent capacity for 90 days to gather operational data. More than 4,300 acre-feet (1.4 billion gallons) of desalted water was delivered to the Colorado River to be included in deliveries to Mexico during this period, conserving a like amount in Lake Mead.

Upper Colorado Region

“Water links us to our neighbor in a way more profound and complex than any other.”

John Thorson

Colorado

Future water supply planning continued to dominate the 2007 water conversation in Colorado, but the year saw one tangible milestone when the Ridges Basin Dam topped out at the Animas-La Plata Project near Durango.

The Bureau of Reclamation reported the 120,000 acre-foot water storage project will be finished in 2012 when it begins to provide a reliable municipal and industrial water supply to Tribes and the people of the Four Corners area.

Meanwhile, the state commissioned a study to determine how much of the state’s water allocation is left to develop under the Colorado River Compact.

This roundtable process also will examine future energy demands on water resources and consumptive and non-consumptive needs on a basin by basin basis.

Wyoming

Inflows to Fontenelle Reservoir during 2007 were 34 percent of normal.

However, before the current drought began, Wyoming initiated a process to identify future water demand, means and methods to protect the state’s water resources. 2007 ushered in the completion of phase 1 of this process with the publication of the Framework Water Plan.

Pursuant to the Framework Plan, the Wyoming legislature appropriated $600,000 to the Green River Basin Plan 2. This plan will set priorities, goals, and develop strategies to take advantage of the basin's water resources. Also, the State Engineer's Office finalized its new Colorado River Compact Administration Program. The first objective for the program is to develop a Green River Basin Consumptive Use Determination Plan.

Utah

The best description for Utah's water supply was continued drought. Below average snowpack and precipitation combined with above average temperatures generated a runoff far below normal. Recent patterns of early snow melt continued. Challenges for meeting the water demand increased into the summer, which was one of the hottest on record in Salt Lake City. The typical cooling fall temperatures were delayed, creating a higher and longer-than-normal delivery period. For the most part, reservoir storage was available to meet the increased demands.

Completion of the Big Sand Wash Reservoir Enlargement provides many benefits to eastern Utah's Uintah Basin.

Additional water will be available for agriculture and municipal uses. Improved water efficiencies and enhancements to the environment, fish, wildlife and recreation are included benefits of the project.

Concentrated conservation efforts during recent drought years resulted in a decreased per capita use. Public awareness and participation have increased annually. Conservation efforts will play an ever increasing role as we meet future demands in a climate-changing world.

New Mexico

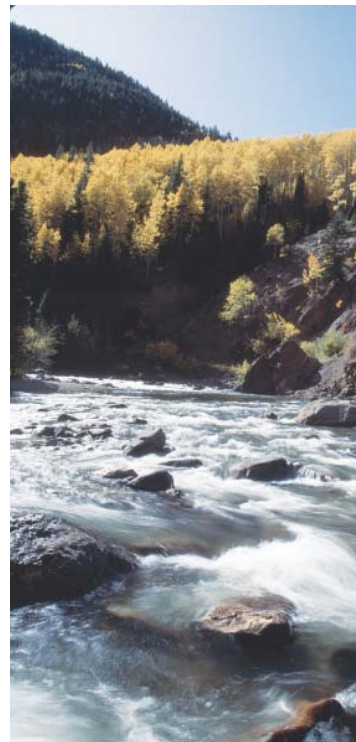

Snowpack totals for Water Year 2007 in the Animas River Basin were 65 percent of average and 71 percent of average in the San Juan River Basin. The supply to Navajo Reservoir during the April through July runoff was 488,000 acre-feet, which equates to 75 percent of the 30-year average. Snowpack totals were non-existent through November for Water Year 2007. However, in December the Animas and San Juan River Basin were subject to large storms receiving 430 percent of average snowpack totals.

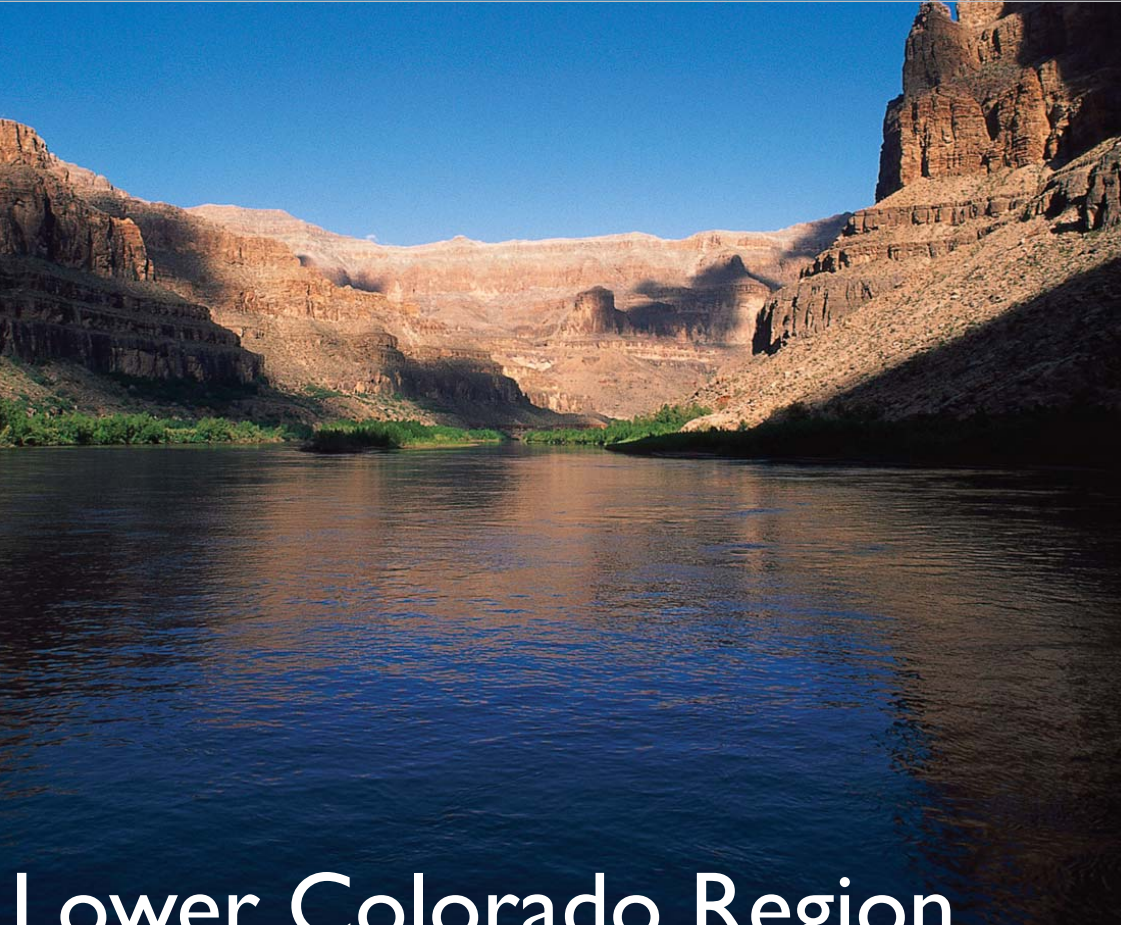

The Animas-La Plata Project remains under budget and construction is progressing with an estimated reservoir filling date from 2009-2011. The Bureau of Reclamation completed the Ridges Basin Dam's embankment structure in November 2007.

The San Juan River Basin Recovery Implementation Program continues to have success toward recovery of the endangered fish species, the Razorback Sucker and Colorado Pikeminnow.

The San Juan Watershed Group and Animas Watershed Partnership was formed to address water quality issues. The plans provide technical support and strategies to promote on the ground projects and Best Management Practices.

Lower Colorado Region

“When the well is dry, we know the worth of water.”

Benjamin Franklin

Colorado River Indian Tribes Partnership

The Colorado River Indian Tribes Partnership members benefitted in 2007 from increased snowpack and a continued reduction in drought conditions in the watersheds. Mountain lakes and streamflows returned to near-normal levels.

In addition, the Tribes with major agricultural crop acreage enjoyed the increase in grain prices and many acres of land were placed in high-value alfalfa and wheat crops. Water use for agriculture on these reservations has risen to the highest quantity in more than 10 years.

The strong interest by the seven states in the new shortage criteria on the River was less dramatic for some members of the Tribes Partnership. The Navajo Tribe maintained a strong interest in preserving enough water to insure its future. All Partnership Tribes may, however, be impacted by changes in the ways water is marketed and transferred under severe shortage conditions.

The invasive quagga mussels have been detected in several irrigation systems located below Hoover Dam, but the infestations are light and the full impact has not hit yet.

Arizona

With the signing of the Record of Decision by the Secretary of the Interior, the new interim operating and shortage guidelines were adopted for the Colorado River. The new guidelines also define discrete shortage operations and reductions that will aid advanced planning and preparation.

December 2007 ended on a positive note for Arizona with continued improvement on the drought status. Storage increased in all of Arizona's reservoirs not located on the Colorado River, a great start to the water year in what has been a long dry period for Arizona.

Nevada

Nevada reached a landmark agreement to manage potential shortages along the Colorado River that resulted in the signing of a Record of Decision by the Department of the Interior in December 2007. The historic agreement is the first to address joint operation of lakes Mead and Powell during drought conditions.

Nevada continued to achieve significant progress toward water conservation and augmentation through groundwater development in east-central Nevada. The Nevada State Engineer approved a major portion of Southern Nevada Groundwater Authority groundwater rights applications in White Pine county, enabling the development over time of up to 60,000 acre-feet annually from the basin.

To further conservation efforts, the SNWA strengthened a number of education and incentive programs. Southern Nevadans consumed 15 billion gallons less water in 2007 than in 2002, despite the addition of 400,000 residents during that span and more than 40 million annual visitors.

California

The year 2007 brought water supply challenges to California. Record dry conditions gripped Southern California during the year, with many locations experiencing the driest year of record. At the same time, water supplies from Northern California's Sacramento Bay-Delta were impacted by court-imposed pumping restrictions in the Sacramento-San Joaquin Delta because of endangered species issues. The ruling could reduce exports to Southern California by as much as 30 percent in 2008. The challenges affecting Southern California made it more critical than ever to efficiently manage the state's supplies from the Colorado River.

California water agencies continued to make progress toward putting into place projects and programs that efficiently manage the state's supplies from the Colorado River. In all, water management partnerships provided 230,000 acre-feet of water to drought-stricken urban Southern California in 2007.

Construction began on the lining of the All-American Canal, which is expected to be completed during 2010. Once completed, 68,000 acre-feet of water will be conserved each year and made available to urban Southern California. The Drop 2 Reservoir is anticipated to be completed by 2010 and is estimated to capture 70,000 acre-feet of water each year that would otherwise be lost from system storage.
