President's Message

Water is the most important resource on earth and is crucial to the life of humans, animals and plants. Water is the lifeline that we share across borders and across species. The history of the establishment of any pioneer settlement highlights the fact that the priority of the settlers was to develop water resources. Development of water resources remains a priority today.

The Colorado River Water Users Association was organized in 1945 for the express purpose of protecting the interests of all those who rely upon the Colorado River system for their water. It remains an organization committed to making certain that cooperation and not contention between the states is the means employed to reach agreement on fair methods of sharing water resources. Resolving sensitive issues and reaching mutual agreement can be accomplished only through open-minded dialogue. It is by means of dialogue and long-range vision that the CRWUA has thrived over the years.

The mission of CRWUA is to “provide a forum for exchanging ideas and perspectives.” The Association is fortunate to have a variety of dedicated, talented people who are

- committed to sharing ideas on managing water for the good of all
- devoted to educating states, municipalities and local water users on the importance of the development, management and conservation of this resource

Collaborative endeavors are only as strong and resourceful as the people behind those efforts. I wish to thank the board of directors, officers and the various committees and committee chairs who are prime examples of the diligence and devotion it takes to manage water for the good of all.

I also wish to thank the general membership who come together to give of their time and expertise in order that ample water will be available to meet the demand of those who are here today and those who will follow us tomorrow.

Our organization is unique in that all the staff is comprised of volunteers. This fact is responsible, in large part, for the success of the CRWUA. We are especially indebted to Ms. Isabel Luna who spends hours coordinating information to be sent out to the membership, paying bills and taking charge of all that is entailed with regard to registration for our conferences.

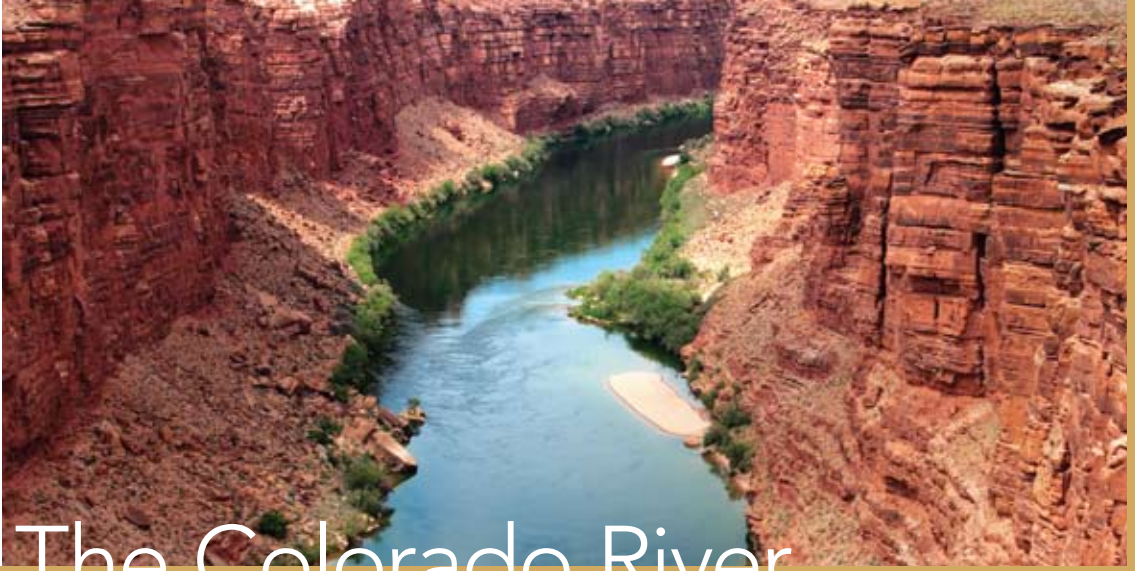

Stephen Covey said that “strength lies in differences, not in similarities.” Our Association is comprised of people who are vastly different in their approach to handling challenges but who are similar in their commitment to making sure all of us in the seven-member states have water to meet our demand.

This Association is honored to be charged with its mission and to be blessed with exceptional people willing to work toward the facilitation of this mission. It has been my pleasure to work with all of you.

Best Personal Regards,

Reclamation

The Bureau of Reclamation in 2008 continued its historic river management programs and activities while implementing changes driven by new management guidelines and agreements.

Releases from Lake Powell to Lake Mead were increased over what had been projected in late 2007, in accordance with the Interim Guidelines signed by Interior Secretary Dirk Kempthorne at the 2007 CRWUA annual meeting. The Guidelines include specific elevations at both reservoirs that, when they occur, trigger increases or decreases in annual water releases from Lake Powell to more equitably distribute the water between the two reservoirs.

The Upper Colorado Region and the Animas-La Plata Project sponsors celebrated the near-complete construction of project features in Colorado. The project was deemed 97 percent complete, with construction beginning on the Navajo Nation Municipal Pipeline features in New Mexico. Lake Nighthorse Reservoir will begin filling in spring 2009. That project is planned for completion in 2012.

A $98.3 million contract was awarded for the Drop 2 Reservoir Storage Project in Southern California. Funded by the Southern Nevada Water Authority, the Central Arizona Project and The Metropolitan Water District of Southern California, the project will on average conserve 70,000 acre-feet of Colorado River water annually that is now lost to U.S. users and the Colorado River system.

The Lower Colorado Region continued to conduct and support a multi-faceted research and development program on climate change and to implement the Lower Colorado River Multi-Species Conservation Program. The region also participated in the Binational Core Group, formed to evaluate potential water management programs and projects that could benefit the United States and Mexico.

Negotiations continued during the year on a proposed pilot run of the Yuma Desalting Plant. The pilot run would verify the suitability of treatment processes and associated facilities during actual operation, provide information on baseline operating costs, test the effectiveness of plant improvements, assess how plant equipment will respond to daily operation, and provide other information that can only be obtained through actual plant operation.

Colorado

Colorado in 2008 sharpened its focus on how to meet the state's looming water supply gap while protecting irrigated agriculture and not over-allocating the Colorado River.

The Colorado River remains the one major river basin in the state that is not under interstate compact administration. There are questions about how much water can—or should be—developed. The major users and water districts, however, agree that compact administration would be disastrous for the state, leaving the last increment of Colorado River development in play.

Colorado does not have a state water plan, by design, but the looming water supply gap has the statewide Interbasin Compact Committee and nine basin Roundtables looking at a vision of what a water future might hold. Major components of a water supply solution include conservation, reuse, agricultural efficiency and rotational fallowing, as well as a possible new trans-mountain diversion out of the Colorado River system.

Complicating factors include possible increased water demands from an oil shale industry, long-term drought and climate change. Meanwhile, the state's population is slated to grow to more than 7 million by the year 2030. State demographers estimate the state passed 5 million people in late 2008.

Wyoming

By all measures, the 2008 snowpack was the most generous the state has received in this decade. Every major drainage in Wyoming experienced normal or near-normal precipitation. The Green River Basin snowpack total was 97 percent of average. However, the effects of prolonged drought in the basin limited the unregulated inflow into Fontenelle and Flaming Gorge reservoirs to 68 and 61 percent, respectfully.

During the year, Wyoming continued to keep its focus on future water planning and resource development. The Wyoming Water Development Commission completed a final report covering the proposed Viva Naughton Reservoir enlargement. The Commission also continued evaluating potential dam and reservoir sites in the upper Green River basin. Of particular interest are areas on the west side of the basin that have experienced water shortages during the recent drought. A final assessment with recommendations for specific projects is expected in 2009.

Pursuant to the state's on-going weather modification project, 2008 ushered in the first full year of cloud seeding operations in the Wind River Mountain Range.

Team scientists indicated the project will require an additional two winters of data collection before independent and verifiable statistical analysis can produce enough evidence to determine the effectiveness of cloud seeding as a means to increase snowpack and augment runoff.

Utah

Utah's mountains and valleys received near-average snowpack and experienced near-average runoff flows during 2008. Additionally, spring runoff timing closely followed normal hydrologic discharge curves to a great degree. Under these conditions, Utah's water managers optimized reservoir storage and releases for the greatest benefit to agricultural, municipal and industrial, recreational, and environmental interests.

Utah's newest hydroelectric power plant was brought on-line during the 2008 water year. The Jordanelle Hydroelectric Plant, located at the base of Jordanelle Dam in Wasatch County, provides up to 12 megawatts of "green-certified" power to Heber Light & Power Co. customers. This run-of-the-river plant will provide clean, renewable power for generations to come.

Water conservation efforts also continued to be major discussion items on the state and water conservancy district agendas. Continuing public education addressing the benefits of proper watering practices and the use of water-wise plants were funded. These efforts will help lead to the water conservation ethic that will be vitally needed as the state continues to grow.

New Mexico

New Mexico's snowpack totals for the 2008 water year in the Animas River Basin were 100 percent of average and 107 percent of average in the San Juan River Basin in 2008. Precipitation was 96 percent of normal for the statewide average. Inflow into the Navajo Reservoir between April and July was 115 percent of the 30-year average. Storage in the Navajo Reservoir reached nearly 1.35 million acre-feet, about 79 percent.

A statewide report on water use in the State of New Mexico—"New Mexico Water Use by Categories"—was made available from the Office of the State Engineer's water use and conservation bureau. This report is used for regional water planning and to track changes in water use in various sectors over time. The New Mexico Interstate Stream Commission released new population projections for New Mexico counties and water planning regions through 2060.

Construction of the Animas-La Plata Project was nearly 65 percent complete as of late September 2008. The project pumping plant was 97 percent complete, and a 2.1-mile 76-inch pipeline between the pumping plant and the dam and reservoir at Ridges Basin is nearly complete. The Project remains under budget and construction is progressing with an estimated completion date of 2012. Construction of the Navajo Nation Municipal Pipeline, a structural component of the Animas-La Plata, began in the fall of 2008. The pipeline is divided into six distinct reaches, including: the city of Farmington, Fruitland, Nenahnezad, San Juan, Hogback and Shiprock, and is projected to be completed by 2011.

The San Juan River Basin Recovery Implementation Program continued to work cooperatively with American Indian tribes, water and power customers, as well as local land owners to improve fish habitat. Ongoing projects are fish bypasses, diversion dams and fish screen, and the restoration of 36 additional miles of critical habitat on the San Juan River. The Navajo Nation also was awarded a $300,000 grant to improve the efficiency of a major farm irrigation system serving the tribe. The grant will help save an additional 26,600 acre-feet of water per year on the Navajo Indian Irrigation Project.

The Albuquerque Bernalillo County Water Utility Authority completed the San Juan-Chama Drinking Water Project, a participating project of the Colorado River Storage Project. Under the project, water is transported through a system of diversion structures and tunnels from the upper tributaries of the San Juan River, through the Continental Divide, into the Rio Grande Basin via the San Juan-Chama Project.

Colorado River Indian Tribes Partnership

During 2008 the Colorado River Indian Tribes Partnership members had moderate snowpack but experienced below-average runoff. The watersheds are near normal but are still below historic averages. On a positive note, concerns about fire danger and the impacts of Bark Beetle infestations were much less. In addition, mountain lakes and stream flows returned to near-normal levels.

In 2008, the Tribes with major agricultural crop acreage experienced wide fluctuations of commodity prices with many crop prices cut in half from last year. The effects of recession, however, have come with the benefit of much lower fuel and fertilizer prices. Agricultural water use on these Reservations has moderated to an average water use year.

The Tribes anticipate increased benefits from a new Federal Government Administration, with renewed recognition and assistance to mitigate the economic hardships many of the Tribes experience. The Navajo Tribe continues to seek settlement of its rights, maintaining a strong interest in preserving enough water to insure its future. All the Tribes, however, may be impacted by changes in the ways water is marketed and transferred under severe shortage conditions.

While invasive quagga mussels have infested Tribe irrigation systems below Hoover Dam, the infestations were lighter and had less impact than expected.

Arizona

In March 2008, the United States and Mexico, through the International Boundary and Water Commission (IBWC) and the Comisión Internacional de Límites y Aguas (CILA), adopted the Terms of Reference United States—Mexico Joint Cooperative Actions, Colorado River Users (Terms of Reference). The Terms created a framework for consultation and evaluation of Colorado River initiatives, including shortage management, augmentation, conservation, operations and the environment.

In addition to the binational work effort, Arizona participated with many agencies in early 2008 to begin the planning process for a possible Yuma Desalting Plant pilot operation. Organizations involved included the Arizona Department of Water Resources, Central Arizona Project (CAP), The Metropolitan Water District of Southern California (MWD), Southern Nevada Water Authority, the Yuma Districts, city of Yuma and the Bureau of Reclamation. The group evaluated the legal, engineering and environmental issues associated with long-term operation of the plant. In the latter part of 2008, CAP, MWD and SNWA proposed to Reclamation that it conduct a one year pilot run of the plant at one-third capacity.

Arizona, through the CAP, also joined forces with other lower basin states in several Colorado River-focused efforts including a tamarisk control study, advance weather modification programs and an augmentation study. Arizona also marked the 12th year of operation of the Arizona Water Banking Authority (AWBA), which had delivered more than 3.4 million-acre-feet of the state's unused Colorado River entitlement. The AWBA executed Resolution 2008-1 in March 2008, establishing a long-term storage credit replacement account for 4th priority Colorado River municipal and industrial users. This established a revolving fund for the credits used and replaced in conjunction with on-river municipal and industrial firming.

In September of 2008, federal legislation was introduced to authorize the White Mountain Apache Tribe water rights settlement and to allow the Secretary of Interior to enter into an agreement. Under this agreement, the AWBA and the federal government will equally share a 7,500 acre-foot-per-year firming obligation.

Under the terms of a letter agreement between the CAP and MWD, the AWBA created 28,442 acre-feet of intentionally created unused apportionment during the year, making it available to Metropolitan under its Colorado River water delivery contract.

Nevada

Amid the extraordinary economic challenges of 2008 and persistent drought, Nevada continued to realize significant achievements in water conservation as well as augmentation through groundwater development in east-central Nevada.

The Nevada State Engineer released a ruling granting the Southern Nevada Water Authority (SNWA) 18,755 acre-feet of water annually in Cave, Dry Lake and Delamar valleys. Because these water rights are eligible for full consumptive use, the SNWA will be able to extend the use of this resource to nearly 32,000 acre-feet annually through reuse. The decision represents a portion of the SNWA's request for up to 200,000 acre-feet of groundwater associated with its Clark, Lincoln and White Pine Counties Groundwater Development Project.

The SNWA was previously granted up to 60,000 acre-feet of groundwater annually from the Spring Valley basin in east-central Nevada and has submitted applications for about 50,000 acre-feet of water annually in Snake Valley. Nevada also forged partnership agreements with Arizona and California to provide funding for Reclamation's anticipated 12-month pilot test of the Yuma Desalting Plant.

Locally, community partnerships and continued incentive programs contributed to conservation milestones. SNWA's annual water consumption decreased by more than 20 billion gallons between 2002 and 2008, despite the addition of 400,000 residents during that span and more than 40 million annual visitors.

California

Drought conditions intensified in California in 2008, with many reservoirs falling to their lowest levels in more than 30 years. The ongoing drought and regulatory restrictions in the Sacramento-San Joaquin Delta in Northern California highlighted the need to effectively manage the state's critical water supplies from the Colorado River.

During 2008, under the direction of the Imperial Irrigation District and San Diego County Water Authority, the lining of the All-American Canal moved forward ahead of schedule, with conserved water moving to urban Southern California sooner than had been anticipated. When completed, 67,000 acre-feet of water will be conserved each year. Construction on the Drop 2 Reservoir Project, adjacent to the All-American Canal in Imperial County, began in late 2008. In exchange for being one of the three agencies funding the reservoir project, MWD expected to receive 34,000 acre-feet of new water during the year.

In 2008, for the first time the MWD-Palo Verde Irrigation District exchange program was implemented at its maximum call, providing Metropolitan with 115,000 acre-feet for the contract year. California and Nevada also reached an agreement to exchange its water supplies to benefit both states. During the year, SNWA provided MWD with 45,000 acre-feet to help ease drought conditions. The water will be returned to Nevada in a future year.

The Interim Guidelines also aided California during the year. MWD was able to recover 50,000 acre-feet of conserved water in Lake Mead during 2006 as part of a demonstration program. The water could not be recovered until the Interim Guidelines were signed.

In 2008, the Coachella Valley Water District began adding up to 4,000 gallons of chlorine daily into the Coachella Canal as a preventative measure to stop invasive and destructive quagga mussels from colonizing the canal and delivery system. Construction on the first phase of the CVWD's Mid-Valley Pipeline Project hit the half-way mark in 2008, on schedule to start delivering a blend of Colorado River and recycled water to its first few customers in early 2009. Coachella also broke ground on its third full-scale groundwater replenishment facility in August 2008.
