Colorado River Water Users Association

2009 Annual Report
and Membership Directory

Mission Statement

To provide a forum for exchanging ideas and perspectives regarding Colorado River use and management with the intent of developing and advocating common objectives, initiatives and solutions.

President's Message

Numerous challenges face the American people today not the least of which is the protection of our precious resources. The Colorado River Water Users Association has committed its efforts since 1945 to protecting the Colorado River for the benefit of all who depend on her waters.

The past two years that I have served as your president have been very fulfilling for me. When I look back on the tasks accomplished in 2009, I am, as always, amazed at the dedication of the membership to keep working together to ensure wise management of the Colorado River while remaining open to and maintaining a positive attitude toward the ideas and opinions expressed within committees and within the membership.

Despite economic uncertainty, the 2009 conference was successful. The number of exhibits increased with all but two or three of the slots being full. Sponsorships actually increased from 2008 due mainly to the members who continually encourage sponsorship. The Membership Committee is to be commended on the work it has done to promote new memberships.

Aristotle is quoted as saying "if you would understand anything, observe its beginning and its development." Thanks to the Public Affairs Committee, we now have oral histories of all the states in the Colorado River Basin. These histories will play a crucial part in helping those who come after us to understand the work and thought that has gone into "developing and advocating common objectives, initiatives and solutions" in managing the river for the good of all.

Another large project handled by the Public Affairs Committee in 2009 was the membership survey. This survey gave us a broad spectrum of topics that our members feel are relevant and would like to see featured in future conferences. Above all, the survey confirmed that the membership rated the annual conference as worthwhile with networking and interaction being the main draw. It was especially gratifying to note that "one-third of respondents said they value their membership in CRWUA more than they value membership in other national and regional associations." This accolade is exceptional in that it is attributed to an organization run by volunteers. The information in this survey will assist the Board and committee chairs to continue to meet the evolving needs of our membership.

Registration for the annual meeting has become much more efficient with the new Cvent software. Thank you to all who took the time necessary to research and decide upon this software. A special thank you to Isabel Luna who manages Cvent for us. Cvent will be an invaluable tool in the future.

This is my last President's Message. I hope I have successfully communicated the appreciation I have for each of you and all you do. I have singled out a few committees, but it is each and every one of you who makes this Association work through your exceptional dedication portrayed through your participation and leadership. I know many of you give countless hours to committees and projects that we all benefit from.

We have a noble mission. I encourage all of you to keep broadening your vision and encouraging others to join us in the work to protect our river.

Best Personal Regards,

Ron Thompson, President

Reclamation

A new era of cooperative relationships under the umbrella of the Department of the Interior’s WaterSMART (Sustain and Manage America’s Resources for Tomorrow) initiative has emerged. The program will work to achieve sustainable water strategies to meet needs in partnership with water users and the states. A key component will be the Colorado River Basin Water Supply and Demand Study, which will define current and future imbalances in water supply and demand in the Colorado River Basin and adjacent areas that receive Colorado River water for approximately the next 50 years. It will develop and analyze adaptation and mitigation strategies to resolve those imbalances. Additionally, Reclamation is participating in an extensive research and development program to investigate the use of new methods for projecting possible future Colorado River flows that take into account increased hydrologic variability and potential decreases in the river’s annual inflow due to a changing climate.

In the Upper Basin, Reclamation continues first filling of the Animas-La Plata Project’s Lake Nighthorse along with continued construction of the project’s Navajo Nation Municipal Pipeline. Reclamation continues to negotiate towards required contracts for the Navajo-Gallup Water Supply Project. The Glen Canyon Dam Adaptive Management Program is now working on a new High-Flow Experiment Protocol for future studies. Colorado River water uses in the Upper Basin include: agriculture—2.4 million acre-feet; municipal and industrial—259,500 acre-feet; exported—766,300 acre-feet.

In the Lower Basin, Reclamation highlights include partnering with Arizona, California and Nevada municipal water agencies to explore innovative methods to conserve Colorado River waters. The Drop 2 Storage Reservoir Project (recently renamed the Warren H. Block Reservoir) will conserve, on average, 70,000 acre-feet of water each year that is now lost to the U.S. due to limited storage capacity, and a year-long pilot run of the Yuma Desalting Plant is presently being conducted to better understand the plant's potential as a long-term resource to help conserve water on the lower river. Colorado River consumptive water use in 2009 for the Lower Basin is estimated to be: 2.7 million acre-feet in Arizona; 4.3 million acre-feet in California; 249,000 acre-feet in Nevada; and 1.5 million acre-feet for Mexico.

Colorado

Colorado enjoyed good reservoir storage at the end of the 2009 water year, which was important as the winter had below-average snowpack across much of the state. Many reservoirs reached levels not seen in the 21st century as storage rebounded from the early 2000s multi-year drought.

Water planners in Colorado are working on a new statewide water supply vision through the Interbasin Compact Committee (IBCC) and the nine Basin Roundtables. The Colorado Water Conservation Board, through the IBCC and Roundtables process, is re-calculating the water supply gap as it looks at future water supply demands. The Colorado River remained a focus for new development.

Early results of the state’s Colorado River Water Availability Study show climate change to be a factor in diminishing water supplies while increasing irrigation demands as growing seasons lengthen. The study is expected to depict a range of volumes that might still be developable and at what risk.

Four major Front Range projects are in varying stages of the federal permitting processes – Colorado Springs and its Southern Delivery System, Denver Water and its Moffat Project, Northern Water with the Northern Integrated Supply Project and its Municipal Subdistrict with the Windy Gap Firming Project.

Denver Water, Northern Water and a coalition of West Slope water users continued to negotiate on a settlement that would provide more West Slope water to the Front Range while helping the West Slope meet some of its own water needs.

Wyoming

In 2009, Wyoming’s snowpack in the Green River Basin was equivalent to that of the 30-year average. However, due to a significant amount of high elevation snow and a cool, wet spring the unregulated inflows into the main stem were 113% of average. By the end of the water year, these favorable conditions resulted in a rise in storage volumes in Fontenelle and Flaming Gorge Reservoirs.

The Wyoming Water Development Commission received an additional two years of funding for the Weather Modification Pilot Program. The additional funding not only allows for the scientific opportunities but also the continued “production-mode” operation of ground based generators that target the headwaters of the basin.

Within the last year, two preliminary projects to divert the State of Colorado’s apportionment from the Basin to the east-slope of Colorado sprung to life. The Million Conservation Resource Group (MCRG) and the Colorado-Wyoming Cooperative Water Supply Project (CWSP) both anticipate diversion(s) from the Green River/Flaming Gorge Reservoir to the Eastern portion of Wyoming and the Front Range of Colorado. The MCRG is in the initial stages of an Environmental Impact Statement where as the CWSP has formed a coalition of public entities to evaluate the available supply from Flaming Gorge Reservoir.

Utah

Utah’s near-average snowpack in 2009 was capped with unusually high rains during late spring. June precipitation values commonly approached 300% in many areas. A good snowpack, coupled with timely and heavy rain showers, allowed Utah’s water managers to fill, or nearly fill, most reservoirs and to optimize releases for the greatest benefit. Late summer reservoir conditions gave water managers the luxury of planning for good water deliveries in 2010, even under the scenario of a potentially dry year.

Strained economic conditions continued to play an adversarial role in water development projects. Water organizations were required to prioritize infrastructure investment to maximize return to their respective current and future contingencies. Some organizations with shovel-ready projects had the opportunity to receive American Recovery and Reinvestment Act (ARRA) funding.

Water conservation education by major water districts also reaped great benefits in 2009. Curators of water conservation gardens saw strong attendance with increased participation at events. Most importantly, major water district usage rates continued their declining trends.

New Mexico

Precipitation across New Mexico’s San Juan Basin was variable, but the year ended with over 200% of average precipitation that helped establish the snowpack for the remainder of the year.

State statute requires that the State Water Plan be updated every five years according to need. With the increasing demand for water, the New Mexico Interstate Stream Commission hosted 21 public meetings across the state to solicit public input into how New Mexico balances its future water needs with limited supplies.

The Animas-La Plata Project began pumping in June into Lake Nighthorse at full capacity. The construction is progressing with an estimated completion date of 2012.

The San Juan River Basin Recovery Implementation Program (SJRIP) implementing actions to achieve recovery of the Colorado River endangered fish species.

The Buckman Project will receive water diverted from the San Juan River, through the Continental Divide, into the Rio Grande Basin, and provide the City of Santa Fe and Santa Fe County with 5,605 acre-feet of water per year.

Colorado River Indian Tribes Partnership

The Ten Tribes occupy Indian reservations with claimed or vested water rights to the Colorado River and include the following: the Chemehuevi Indian Tribe; the Cocopah Indian Community; the Colorado River Indian Tribes; the Fort Mojave Indian Tribe; the Jicarilla Apache Tribe; the Navajo Nation; the Northern Ute Tribe; the Quechan Indian Tribe of the Fort Yuma Reservation; the Southern Ute Indian Tribe; and the Ute Mountain Ute Indian Tribe.

In 1992, the Ten Tribes formed the Colorado River Basin Tribes Partnership for the purpose of strengthening tribal influence over the management and utilization of Colorado River water resources. This led to active participation by the Partnership in negotiations with the seven states and, during 1996, the Ten Tribes Partnership formally joined the Colorado River Water Users Association, with three of its members serving on the CRWUA board of trustees.

Since 1992, the Ten Tribes have worked with the seven basin states, the United States, and CRWUA to develop and promote solutions to areas of mutual concern. In addition, the tribes have actively participated in the ongoing business of CRWUA, serving on various committees and assisting in the development of CRWUA resolutions.

The tribes believe that their involvement in CRWUA, one of the most respected water users organizations in the Colorado River Basin, will assure a more beneficial and profitable utilization of Colorado River water resources for all parties. Beginning in 2012 The Ten Tribes will take over the leadership reigns of the CRWUA as one of their members will be appointed President of the organization.

Arizona

The 2009 water year began with productive storms on the Salt and Verde watersheds, which filled Salt River Project reservoirs and raised the water level at Roosevelt Lake to its highest elevation since modifications to Roosevelt Dam were completed in 1996. These ample water supplies were much appreciated as the remainder of the year witnessed below-average precipitation and one of the driest monsoon seasons in recorded history.

Throughout the year, the Central Arizona Project (CAP) continued the first phase of its Acquisition, Development, and Delivery of New Water Supplies (ADD Water) process. This phase focused on policy decisions concerning how future water supplies acquired by CAP should be paid for and shared.

In July, Arizona, through CAP, solidified its commitment to participate in a pilot run of the Yuma Desalting Plant (YDP) in collaboration with the Bureau of Reclamation, the Metropolitan Water District of Southern California, and the Southern Nevada Water Authority

Arizona faced water-energy nexus issues directly as the economic viability of the Navajo Generating Station was threatened by nitrogen emissions regulations. More than 95% of the power used by the CAP to lift Colorado River water into central Arizona, and a significant portion of Arizona's power, comes from the Navajo Generating Station.

Nevada

Despite experiencing one of the driest years in four decades, Southern Nevada continued to make extraordinary strides in community-based outdoor and indoor conservation in 2009, surpassing its 250 GPCD conservation goal two years early. As a result, the SNWA adopted a new conservation goal of 199 GPCD by 2035, made watering restrictions permanent and revised its Water Smart Landscapes rebate program to ensure long-term conservation.

The SNWA continued to pursue groundwater resources, including in the Snake Valley Basin, where Nevada and Utah worked toward a draft agreement to equally share 132,000 acre-feet of groundwater. Additionally, SNWA continued state and federal permitting activities associated with the Clark, Lincoln and White Pine Counties Groundwater Development Project.

If drought conditions persist, Lake Mead's water level could drop below SNWA's first intake, which is used to convey water for treatment and distribution in Southern Nevada. To help offset drought impacts, the SNWA is constructing a third intake into Lake Mead. The project is one of the most technically advanced of its kind in the world.

California

Already dealing with third year of drought and pumping restrictions in the Sacramento-San Joaquin Delta, California was faced with another water supply challenge in December when a California judge invalidated the Quantification Settlement Agreement (QSA). The QSA allowed California to reduce its Colorado River water use to its basic 4.4-million-acre-foot apportionment.

The All-American Canal Lining Project was substantially completed in February, one year ahead of schedule. This enabled the early transfer of conserved water from the Imperial Valley to the San Diego region to partially offset shortages.

In October, Coachella Valley Water District completed the Thomas E. Levy Groundwater Replenishment Facility. The project will replenish up to 40,000 acre-feet of Colorado River water annually into the Coachella Valley's aquifer.

Metropolitan Water District and Palo Verde Irrigation District reached an agreement for a one-year increase to an existing long-term fallowing program. The temporary program provides urban Southern California 65,000 acre-feet of water through 2010. With this program, along with QSA transfers, Metropolitan was able to deliver 1.1 million acre-feet, the most since 2003.
